ABSTRACT

In the current era of globalization, many changes and developments occur as human thought continues to develop and advance, which results in all aspects of the economy also experiencing changes and developments. With the development of economic aspects, this provides space for businesses to be creative. Various types of businesses are being developed, one of which is the rental business. Car rental services are increasing because people's desire to experience the sensation or use of a car is starting to increase. Apart from that, people see that cars make many things easier. So, renting a car is something that is most often done by people today. In Indonesia, with a Muslim majority, the practice of transportation services or rental car rentals must be seen through the principles of Islamic law which are connected to economic activities by prioritizing moral and ethical values. In Islamic law, the use of car rental services is a form of Ijarah contract. The aim of this research is to examine Argo Mulia Car Rental from the Perspective of the Ijarah Agreement. The research method uses qualitative phenomenological research with data collection techniques using interviews and documentation. Data analysis techniques use data reduction, data display and drawing conclusions. The results of the research on car rentals at Argo Mulia, Kota Depok, which are reviewed through the Ijarah contract consisting of the contracting person (aqid), the sighat of the contract, the wage (ujrah), and the benefits have been implemented and in accordance with the perspective of the Ijarah contract.
